MAIN PART

Tough times are sounding the alarm about the need to study and apply psychology in all areas of life, science. In particular, the field of law enforcement and its application in practice is the subject of extensive research in psychology.

It is known that the science of psychology is a multidisciplinary set of knowledge, which includes not only theory but also practice, and requires research in a combination of different disciplines.

The science of psychology, including legal psychology, plays an important role in strengthening the legal framework of the state and society, increasing the effectiveness of crime prevention and combating. Comprehensive, in-depth understanding of psychological knowledge, the formation of skills ensures a high culture of communication of a lawyer. Psychological culture not only increases the effectiveness of legal activity, but also reflects its humane nature.

In the field of criminology and criminology, psychology is closely linked with law, which is associated with the application of psychological knowledge in operational search and investigation activities, as well as the determination of the determinant (determinant) of the crime committed, the use of psychological methods in preventing antisocial behavior.

The psychological culture of a lawyer requires all employees of law enforcement agencies to acquire a set of psychological knowledge, as well as skills and methods, which form a culture of high behavior. The combination of psychology and jurisprudence enriches both disciplines, ensuring that one of the most important problems is the triumph of the criteria of social justice in law enforcement and the judiciary.

Theorist and practitioner A.F. Koni, who made a significant contribution to the development of legal psychology, paid great attention to the study of the psychology and testimony of witnesses and victims. A.F. Koni acknowledged that in order for a judge to be a judge, the pressure must be on the will of those around him, who can resist the influence of "social feelings" in the guise of "social thought".

Therefore, using the rich experience of legal psychology with a certain degree of scientific and practical features, which allows us to draw the right conclusions in legal matters, to analyze the various phenomena, disorders, mental experiences and situations that force us to go beyond the written and unwritten laws. the importance of interpretation needs to be clarified.

In addition, it is necessary to use the rich experience of jurisprudence to master the psychology of the prisoner and the methods of determining his attitude to the fact of imprisonment, to form in-depth theoretical and professional training.

The psychology of law reveals its important aspect in the following areas, which include professional profiles of the legal profession.

- Investigator's activities:
- in forensic observation,
- in arranging the receipt of the necessary information,
- in the evidence,
- in the correct assessment of interrelationships,

- in the communicative sphere of the investigator (accessibility), in the indicator of the investigator's work culture,
 - from the investigator in terms of organizational skills and the investigation of forensic hypotheses,
 - in psychological inversion.
- The activities of the judge:
- in character,
 - in the form of a judge,
 - in honoring those gathered in the courtroom,
 - in influencing the public opinion of the judge,
 - in the reconstruction of the judiciary,
- The activities of the prosecutor:
- in various situational activities of prosecutors,
 - in the networks of prosecutorial control,
 - in the qualities of thinking,
 - in the presence of a strong will of the prosecutor,
- Lawyer activities:
- in the effective work of a lawyer,
 - in the reconstructive activity of the defender,
 - in the factors of transactional activity.
- The activities of the staff of the Criminal Investigation Department:
- in a number of operational situations of criminal investigation time,
 - during the observation of the time of the criminal investigation,
 - on the reconstructive side of the activities of the inspector of the criminal investigation department,
 - in the activities of employees against economic crimes,
 - in their knowledge of human behavior,
 - in the search for motives that led to the commission of the crime.

The conclusion is that today, in order to enrich the knowledge of our lawyers, it is necessary to master the field of legal psychology. So, it makes sense to think about the integral unity of law and psychology, because without taking into account the psychological factors, it is impossible to build a state governed by the rule of law, to strengthen law and order, to fight crime. After all, any law is valid only if people understand it and want to obey it.
