MAIN PART

Our country, which considers human values and family strength to be of the highest priority, has identified a number of functions for the families that have been formed in the light of our long-standing values and modern requirements. One of these is to form a relationship in the family. Research shows that one of the main conditions for a strong family, respect and trust between members, the child grows up in a good environment and is brought up in a good environment, good manners, good manners, well-behaved manners, manners and morality. The Uzbek people have always taken a serious approach to the upbringing of children, so it is no coincidence that our people have invented the saying "seven neighborhood parents for one child." With that in mind, almost all members of society are responsible for the upbringing of one child. The role of the mother in the upbringing of the child is high, if the mother's behavior and manners are good, the child's upbringing will be beautiful, his words will be pure, his morals will be perfect, and he will be highly respected. Our adults have always paid special attention to the culture of the girl's behavior, teaching her to speak in a low voice, not to look straight into the eyes of parents, always to be sweet and polite. One of the most effective ways to create a culture of communication in the family is to teach mutual respect and understanding. A family is a collection of people who form a whole. Properly organized relationships play an important role in preventing conflicts and wars. We judge people by their dress and, of course, their culture of behavior. There is a wise saying among our wise people: "The greatest wealth is intelligence and knowledge, the greatest heritage is the best education, and the greatest poverty is ignorance." In fact, the greatest treasure left to us by our grandmothers and mothers, which reflects the courage, patience and qualities of real Uzbek women, is education, good manners and beautiful treatment. Upbringing in the family is mainly focused on children. Parents, on the other hand, should pay attention to the following when shaping their children's culture based on their responsibilities:

1. Depending on the age of the child, this process is very important because a child who has not yet fully understood himself may not yet fully understand the meaning of the words, so they are asked a lot of questions. In this case, it takes a lot of patience from the parents, and it is advisable to answer the child's questions politely.
2. Gender characteristics of the child. We know that girls are very capricious and demanding, and it is important to instill in them a culture of treatment from an early age.
3. The child's interests. If a parent tries to go his own way without taking into account the interests of the child, we can observe the loss of ability in the child, the manifestation of aggressive behavior.
4. Listen to the child. We also listen to the person who hears us, and if you don't listen to your child, your child won't listen to you either. Listening to a child is one of the most important ways to build a culture of communication in the family. Paying attention to what the child hears from others and what they tell us is an important condition for raising a child properly.
5. Teach the child to speak.

In our society, there are always problems with immorality, all of which again depends on the family environment, upbringing. Our great ancestor Abu Ali Ibn Sina did not say in vain that "in order to be always young and strong, a person should not offend other people, should not break his heart, and should be kind", because the solution to any dispute is a good deal.

Marriage is based on the mutual consent of two young couples, and mutual respect, good treatment, kindness and love maintain this sacred unity. Our culture of communication is known from the way we greet to the way we look, and that's how family upbringing is valued.

Serious shortcomings in the communication process: Unpleasant situations that occur during communication between two or more people are the result of mistakes made by the builders of this conversation. Such shortcomings undermine the quality, structure, and effectiveness of communication, and in the process of communication between men, "swearing and using rude words" are cited as one of the factors that ensure the ineffectiveness of the conversation. The use of vulgar words, especially in communication culture, encourages the child to learn these words. The wise saying of our wise people, "The wound of the knife will heal, the wound of the tongue will not heal," is not in vain. Only when we enter this process of communication, in which the processes of cognition, such as thinking, intuition, perception, are activated, so scientists have always advised to listen to the child. In children who engage in active communication, processes such as thinking and reasoning go well. The formation of a culture of behavior should begin from the first days of a child's life. Between the ages of 3 and 7, a child acquires more than half of the total knowledge, and by that time the child will be a professional imitator, so it is recommended to start raising a child from the earliest days. Strong pressures, strict discipline, and many restrictions in the family environment can lead to shyness, shyness, and inability to be proactive.

Shyness is a negative trait for the younger generation growing up in today's evolving society. In many children, this is the result of growing up alone, or being brought up under intense pressure, neglected by their parents. This can have a negative effect on the child's thinking.

One of the priorities in developing a culture of good behavior in a child is to listen to him or her and show him or her the right direction. Taking into account the wishes of the child, it can be said that he wants to be recognized by others, to be heard. If a parent listens to a child attentively, he or she will send a signal to the child that "your words are important to me." Based on these processes, it is advisable to raise a child.

In conclusion, it can be said that speech and the words that come from it are the highest blessings bestowed on a person, and speech is a process that determines a person's culture of behavior. It is important to emphasize that in order to ensure the stability of the family, it is important for a man and a woman to be open-minded, obedient and not to fall into the trap of "yes". The human race can live biologically for some time without water and food, but it can never live without speech, without relationships.

Adequate examples set by adults, correct thinking, and tomorrow's growing human development will bring the younger generation to the society in an exemplary manner, serving the future of the country.

"The words that come out of your mouth are either perfect or destructive."
